IN HOC SIGNO VINCES.

FARMERS cannot realize how unsatisfactory and unremunerative were the products of the farms of their forefathers, or how dear and difficult to obtain were the products of

SEVENTY YEARS AGO manufacture. What is now a necessity of comfortable existence was then unknown, or practically unattainable by men of moderate means. Their families were fed from the growth of the fields, and clothed with the product of domestic looms. Little was purchased from beyond the boundary of the farm, both because there was little to buy and still less to buy with. There was no surplus, as a rule, that could fill the family treasury, offer inducement to extravagance, or lay up stores for a "rainy day" or declining years. Life had its compensations—industry was a necessity, wants were few, rural tastes simple and natural, and consuming ambition less controlling than at present.

In a hill town of one of the Eastern states almost exclusively agricultural still, there was recently found in a country store a day book of a former proprietor, bearing the date of 1817, in which the following items appear in charges to customers:

The history of ANDREW JACKSON'S two Presidential terms is crowned with lessons that ought to be learned by wildcat financiers. Every evil of reckless political banking was then exemplified, and every one of these evils would be duplicated by the Alliancian plan. The idea that state taxation or land loans could be paid out of the profits of wildcat banking is the most pronounced lunacy. When a man can lift himself by his bootstraps, or make water run up hill, or invent perpetual motion, then he can abolish taxation and run State Governments on the interest derived from loans of flat money on corn and potato security.

Let us try to show the American farmer, mechanic, and laborer that good money is the safeguard of business.

THE nearer producer and consumer are brought together the more the profit to the producer, the less the cost to the consumer, and the less the profit to the middleman.

EVERY worker at manufacturing in this country consumes over $50 worth of our agricultural produce per year, the English laborer consuming only $4.20 worth.

A FEW years ago wire nails were so dear farmers could not afford to use them, but now, under Protection, they have fallen in price until they are sold for less than the tariff on the imported article, and consumers get made nail which are not only low in price, but the best in quality of any made in the world.

WOULD that all Americans had the love of country and of home institutions that possessed the spirit of WASHINGTON. His adopted son, GEORGE WASHINGTON PARKE CURTIS, in a letter to THOMAS CARREY, dated April 7th, 1839, relates an incident which well illustrates the Americanism of the Father of his Country. Says CURTIS: "In 1779, when in command of his last army, in which I had the honor to bear a commission, a blue coat with embroidery was the arrangement made by a board of general officers as the costume of the chief. WASHINGTON merely asked, 'Can this affair be done in the United States?' On being told 'no,' that the embroidery must be executed in Europe, the venerable chief declined the whole affair instantaneously.

A BETTER opportunity than the present never presented itself to the Republican party of Mason and Lewis counties.

At the last Presidential election,

CARREY carried this Senatorial District by a bare majority of one. At that time the full strength of both parties was undoubtedly brought out. There was no scratching. There were no factions.

Our Democratic friends cannot deny the fact that there are sores within their party lines which have never been healed and which the nomination of Judge WALL but irritates. We mean to cast no reflection on the character of the Democratic nominee, when we say that we believe he can be easily defeated. Can't we try anyhow?

The history of ANDREW JACKSON'S two Presidential terms is crowned with lessons that ought to be learned by wildcat financiers. Every evil of reckless political banking was then exemplified, and every one of these evils would be duplicated by the Alliancian plan. The idea that state taxation or land loans could be paid out of the profits of wildcat banking is the most pronounced lunacy. SOUTHERN BUTTERMILK.

It is Said to Be Finer Than that of Any Other Section.

To the southern housekeeper butter milk is a necessity, every day necessity. She can make it for her use, but put it upon her table as a beverage.

"I never use 'balding' powder," said a lady to a New York Recorder reporter one day, "except in case," and I noticed she expressed the minds of the southern women generally.

She can even sour her sweet milk with vinegar rather than not make her biscuit in the usual way. The Tennessee woman churns every day in warm weather, and she churns sweet milk, not fat, all the milk that is not used for family purposes is put into the churn. It follows that the amount of butter is small, but it is the buttermilk that is great, and that she gets in such abundance that the children call the little child: "Mammie, what gives the buttermilk?" is not so strange, after all. The children drink it as they would water.

She dines it often the only beverage upon the table. What is not needed for the family is readily sold at the uniform price of ten cents per gallon.

Many a woman of the south makes her pin money in this way.

In the absence of a medical or physician who knew the habits of both northern and southern people once remarked: "I believe that one reason the people of the south do not suffer so much from dyspepsia is because they drink buttermilk. It is not only a promoter of good digestion, but a good blood purifier, and therefore a valuable internal cosmetic."

Do you suppose, my northern lady, that when you taste the sour, salted water of your mother churning after the great golden lump comes forth you can form a just idea of what southern buttermilk is?

If you wish to do so you must sacrifice somewhat of your butter's gift and flavor, you must churn as did the black "mammy" and then you may know the fresh, sweet, nutritious, non-malarial, anti-hypertrophic buttermilk of the sunny southland.

POETRY AND DEMOCRACY.

Poets will give expression to the Great Poem of the Nation, as it was never heard in the old world literature," says Walter Blackshear Harte in the April New England Magazine. "A whisper of it was heard almost for the first time when the French revolutionaries were beginning to stir the heart of man, and we shall hear no more of this trifle about this age being too democratic and too prosaic for the production of good poetry. If the common life of the nations cannot afford inspiration to a great poet, then let us hope that posterity will indeed die forever, for it will then appear that the greatest poem of God is ridiculous in the eyes of his human mouthpieces. The awakening intellect of the millions will throw down kings and aristocrats and plutocrats and all that is vulgar and trivial forever, and there will then be a greater sense of the divine, more divine inspiration for the true poet in the common life of the people. The old poets, from Homer down, conceived themselves principally with the personal merit of the poet, and the men who wear the pens of circumstance, and whom we have since learned to accept as great. They have really been defined by the greatness of the poets. History is beginning to show us how small and mean and petty they were in their lives. The poets were too often courtiers."

Dress of Salvation Army Women.—It is when I hear Rev. Howell Booth says about the dress worn by Salvation Army women: "The dress, I think, was developed bit by bit. It was not in the early days so distinctive a uniform as it is now. In the Christian times period the dress was small and delicate, and it might be trimmed with black velvet, but the strings were of white ribbon, which soon became soiled. Our present bonnet, when you come to consider how many styles of face it has to suit, is not made to fit any face, but the hair—what a point which we have to consider—the dress might possibly be either black or white. Now, the uniform is very comfortable, and it is pleasant to think that we need not discard it for any change of fashion. My only fear is that our dress should look rather too small for the very poor people we go among, for our chief point is that we should be in all things one with them-selves."

Dress of Salvation Army Women.

It is when I hear Rev. Howell Booth says about the dress worn by Salvation Army women: "The dress, I think, was developed bit by bit. It was not in the early days so distinctive a uniform as it is now. In the Christian times period the dress was small and delicate, and it might be trimmed with black velvet, but the strings were of white ribbon, which soon became soiled. Our present bonnet, when you come to consider how many styles of face it has to suit, is not made to fit any face, but the hair—what a point which we have to consider—the dress might possibly be either black or white. Now, the uniform is very comfortable, and it is pleasant to think that we need not discard it for any change of fashion. My only fear is that our dress should look rather too small for the very poor people we go among, for our chief point is that we should be in all things one with them-selves."

Big Pay for Knot Making.

There is in St. Louis a firm of rope makers and dealers that has a side line that it does not advertise. It is the manufacture and preparation of hammocks.

The firm sells about one hundred of these ropes annually. The price of the rope, with the noose ready for use, is five dollars. The ropes are hand-made and of hemp, and one of the employees of the firm is North St. Louis rope-maker tied the knot. A few weeks ago he tied the knot for Mr. T. H. Hickman, of the hardware firm of Madisonsville, Ill., had a man to hang at Edwardsburg. He bought a rope that he thought would answer the purpose. The tying of the knot he found, however, to be a most difficult task, and he had to tie and knot it to St. Louis to have the knot made. The rope-maker charged him two dollars and fifty cents for tying the knot.

Antient Envelopes.

Envelopes are supposed to be quite modern, but in the Binswanger manuscripts there is a reference to an antient envelope. There is a letter from Martin Sloane, dated Stockholm, April 24, 1755, inclosed in an ordinary envelope, which is opened on and mounted at the end of the letter.

IN THE HOLD.

A Startling Story of the Cruiser Baltimore.

Strange Galvanic Current Eats a Hole in the Condenser.

When the Chilian Imbrogo Was in Its Most Threatening Aspect and Her Services in Greatest Demand, the Baltimore's more Helplessness Was Known.

PHILADELPHIA, May 18.—Under the keen eye of a board of experts appointed by Secretary of the Navy Tracy, it has just come to light that a strangely generated galvanic current played queer havoc with the electrical system of the steamship cruiser Baltimore. It was when the vessel reached the Mare Island navy yard, San Francisco, that the damage was discovered.

The Baltimore has been at sea less than a twelvemonth, and when the Chilian imbroglio was in its most threatening aspect, the condition of the cruiser's electrical system was in greatest demand, the Baltimore's helplessness excited a deal of anxiety.

The condenser was removed and examined by a peculiar action of the ship's officers, who reported that the damage was removed and the interior found to be singularly honeycombed, as though eaten out by the peculiar action of the salt waters in which the ship was.

WINDFALL FOR THE LEES.

Surprising Allowance by the Court of Claims.

WAGNER, May 18.—The court of claims gave a most remarkable finding in the celebrated Lee case of damages for timber cut off the Ravenswood (Va.) estates during the war. The claim is an old one and has excited much comment because it was the heirs of Robert E. Lee who were trying to recover from the government that Robert E. Lee fought against.

The experts were compelled to have their report. They were compelled to have the whole condenser with its many coils of wire, and the entire electrical system completely examined. Then they discovered that an electrical current from some unknown source was the sole cause of the trouble.

It was first thought that the current came from the ship's dynamo or other source, but this theory failed when it was found electrical currents ran near, but did not come into actual contact with the condenser.

It was then decided to carefully examine the different components which entered into the condenser, and it was found that zinc plating, copper tips, brass tubes and other metals in the interior produced a galvanic current, which had been working since the vessel left Philadelphia, destroying everything connected with the condenser by which a current could be formed.

The plans of the Baltimore were purchased by ex-Secretary of the Navy Whitney, from Sir William Armstrong, the British shipbuilder, at $80,000, and the condenser's plans came with the cost.

CIRCUS TRAIN WRECKED.

Four Showmen Lose Their Lives—Floods Cut Off.

ATRONIC, May 18.—The first section of Ringling Bros.' circus train, east-bound on the Central Branch railroad, was derailed one mile east of Cordova at 3:45 o'clock Tuesday morning. Four showmen were killed and five were badly injured. The accident occurred when the train passed over a small culvert. The engine passed over in safety, but the structure gave way, with the first car. Several cars were piled up in the stream. About twenty head of stock were drowned. Two dead bodies had been taken from the train, and a coroner was sent for the scene of the accident at 4 o'clock, and assistant chief surgeon Parrar left shortly afterward on a special train. The recent heavy rains caused the culvert to give way.

ALL THREE DROWNED.

Two Men Go to the Rescue of a Third, But All Are Lost.

CASE, Neb., May 18.—Nelson Packard Martin Woodward and an old fisherman named Beinhoff, were drowning in the Niobrara river under peculiar circumstances. Beinhoff was rowing across the river and his boat was caught in the current and carried over the dam. Packard and Woodward were in a mill and jumped into the water, but their boat went upright in the swift current, and they were washed ashore. They were pulled out by a fisherman, who was an excellent swimmer, clinging to pieces of wood at the surface for a moment, then he went down. Both men had large families.
